sissippl us, the President of the United States and his agents. The State petitions for an injunction against said parties, restraining them as the executive power of the United States from carrying into effect the congressional reconstruction bill. Our dispatches have not informed us as to the result of the argument. Possibly it may last for two or three days. The counsel for the State of Mississippi have already published their petition for an injunction, and it has gone before the country as a political document instead of before the Supreme Court as a legal argument. The most striking feature of it is the entire ignoring of the rebellion and its consequences. Whether the court has jurisdiction in the matter, whether the President of the United States can be made a defendant party at Wheeling, have since paid the city, struction act is appearant. struction act is unconstitutional; these are all elaborately argued, while nothing whatever is said on the right of the State of Misalasippi to appear in court at all, until it is purged of every political taint occasioned by the rebellion. The whole question is agitated in the old spirit of State rights, with the single exception of a recognition of the nation-The whole question is agitated for the old spirit of State rights, with the single exception of a recognition of the national Judiciary as the tribunal of dernier resort. Indeed, the Supreme Court is invited to go back to the origin of the war and to sit in judgment on all the acts of the Governmens while it was waged. It is told in the most solemn manner that Mississippi is in the Union, and that Congress has no right to treather as if she were not, and being in the Union, and that Congress has no right to treather as if she were not, and being in the Union, and shat all the sovereign rights and immunities which belong to any other State. A train of issues without end seems to await the bearing of the court, if leave is but granted even to fle the petition, and long before they could be heard and decided, the reconstruction act will have been carried into execution in Mississippi and every other. Southern State. The law will have accomplished the purpose for which it was enacted, and this invoking the interposition of the Supreme Court in questions relating to the political consequences of the rebellion will prove in the end both fulle and ill advised. There is nothing for the South to do but to accept the consequences of its own acts, and to acquiesce in the conquering party in such a stroggle, has a natural right to
